TRIP WORTHWHILE

— written by Ellen Pill

"When I look at the people here at the Wooster Community Hospital, they are an image of Dr. Ofori—very friendly, very courteous—makes a patient feel good!" Alioune Daffee was working in Ghana when he met Wooster cardiologist Cyril Ofori. Ofori visits Ghana often, and always allows time to work in local medical clinics.

Daffee was a patient at one of those clinics. "They [the people at the clinic] told me, 'There is a very good doctor coming next month...you should meet him.' So I met Dr. Ofori and found that he is a great man and a great doctor."

Mr. Daffee tried to arrange his clinic appointments to continue with Dr. Ofori, but their schedules were impossibly mismatched. With the prospect of heart valve surgery looming, Daffee and Ofori decided that traveling to Wooster was the best option. Ofori stepped in to help make all the necessary arrangements from accommodations to contacting Alioune's medical insurance. Mr. Daffee is a natural native of Senegal, in West Africa.

When asked if he will continue to see Dr. Ofori for follow-up care, Daffee said he would definitely come back to Wooster. Why make such a long commute? "To me it is important how people treat me. Everyone is so nice in this hospital- it's amazing!"
